Clinton vows cooperation, will release '70s tax returns

Associated Press

WASHINGTON — President Clinton acknowledged Thursday night he had significantly overstated his loss in the Whitewater land deal and promised to release late 1970s tax returns to answer lingering questions about the investment.

In a nationally televised news conference, Clinton vowed to keep health reform and other legislative items on track, even in the face of the simmering investment controversy.

Republican Senate leader Bob Dole immediately said Clinton had been "credible" and had "helped himself" with his remarks. He and House Whip Newt Gingrich said that many questions remain and that they would continue to push for public hearings.

Clinton said he expected special counsel Robert Fiske to question both him and his wife, Hillary Rodham Clinton, about their investments, and he promised they would "cooperate with him in any way he decides is appropriate."

Clinton also said he would cooperate with congressional hearings, and did not rule out personal testimony.

Clinton spent nearly 45 minutes in the East Room for the second evening news conference of his administration, opening with a statement in which he not only detailed his new willingness to release financial records but also vowed not to let Whitewater stall health care reform and other major initiatives.

Clinton said it might appear to the country that Washington was preoccupied with Whitewater, "but our administration is preoccupied with the business we were sent here to do for the American people."

"The American people should know that I and my administration will not be distracted," Clinton told a nationally televised evening news conference.

Clinton also said he would release a new accounting of his investment that would show he lost roughly $47,000 on the land deal.

Clinton replied with a blunt "absolutely not" when asked if he had any knowledge of actions by any of his appointees to stall or otherwise influence federal regulators as they investigated a savings and loan at the center of the Whitewater affair.

WordPerfect merger represents national trend of cooperation

By JAMES AHLSTROM
AND CLAUDIA ARGUETA

Novell Inc.'s proposed acquisition of WordPerfect Corp. and Borland International Inc.'s Quattro Pro reflects a trend toward cooperation in the computer industry.

In the past, corporate independence may have hurt WordPerfect and Massachusetts' computer industry, while Silicon Valley has benefited from cooperation within the industry.

According to Inc. magazine, a decentralized network-based industrial system has helped Silicon Valley while Massachusetts has suffered due to corporate independence. Centralized companies that promote secrecy and corporate loyalty usually can't benefit from external sources of information.

WordPerfect's reluctance to position itself as a publicly-traded corporation leans more toward the independent approach. And the company's rejection of Microsoft's help may account for part of the decline in their product's popularity. Microsoft gave WordPerfect a version of Windows several months before it was released, but the company was slow to move on the development of their own version of Windows.

"The whole industry is moving away from integrated, it is becoming document-centric," said David Weymouth, spokesman for WordPerfect. "There was more competition early on, but there will be more cooperation in the future. We are not going to share code, but work more closely together."

With the expected acquisitions by Novell, the company will be able to combine networking, spreadsheets and word processing into a congruent suite.

"We will be able to produce one integrated package that will have the backing of Novell's networking expertise," Weymouth said. "That will make it the most competitive suite out there."

"Consumers demand it — they don't want to worry about purchasing several separate applications," Weymouth said. "They are starting to conform standards so individual users can incorporate features of separate applications seamlessly in the creation of a document."

But analysts are skeptical that the merger will work. Novell's stock went down 20 percent in the two days after the announcement was made.

While Novell will become the second largest personal computer company in the United States and one of the largest software companies in the world after it acquires the two software makers, analysts question the financial value of the deal, according to the Wall Street Journal.

But locally, Novell and WordPerfect spokespeople are more optimistic about the future of the computer industry in Utah.

Students shouldn't keep sexual assault a secret, BYU Police say

2 women report assaults made by male Y student

Editor's Note: Some of the names in this series have been changed to protect the identity of the victims.

In the last three weeks, three women have reported incidents of men making unwanted advances toward them. The men had different descriptions.

But Mike Harroun, director of administrative services of BYU Police, said the number of sexual assaults has probably not significantly increased — victims are just reporting incidents more often.

Harroun said victims of sexual harassment need to report incidents immediately. Reporting incidents quickly increases the chances of apprehending the perpetrator.

"A sexual assault that goes unreported is permission for the perpetrator to strike again," said Ofa Moeai of Women's Services and Resources.

"Jane," a BYU student who was assaulted and requested not to be identified, said she thinks women who have been victimized feel like they did something wrong and that the assault was their fault.

Jane said she was afraid to report the incident to police because she was not physically harmed and she thought no one would take her seriously.

After she saw the report of a similar incident in the March 4 Police Beat, Jane felt the courage to report the incident.

Both Jane and the victim of the March 4 assault, later referred to as "Mary," said the police officers they talked to were understanding and helpful.

Adams said the combined testimonies of Jane and Mary aided in swift disciplinary action of the man.

Mary said women who feel like they have been violated need to report it, no matter how small it might seem.

"If they feel like they have been violated, they have," Jane said.

As Jane told her story, she sat playing with her keys, noticeably nervous. She began to tremble as she relived the terror she experienced in her BYU American Heritage class February 2.

For 90 minutes, Jane sat frozen, terrified as a man moved his hand up her leg and beyond in the darkness of an auditorium.

"I didn't want to think it was really happening," Jane said about her experience during an American Heritage extra-credit movie in the JSB Auditorium.

She said she did not want to draw attention to herself because she thought the people seated near her would think she was doing something wrong.

Jane did not report the incident immediately. She called BYU Police after reading the March 4th Police Beat, and seeing a report about an experience similar to her own.

Mary filed the initial report that appeared in Police Beat. Mary's experience also occurred in the JSB Auditorium. Because she had a headache, she was trying to rest her eyes during the movie and was not paying attention to the strange man sitting next to her. She said she felt something on her leg but thought it was just his leg shaking.

When she opened her eyes, she said she saw the man's hand on her chair, next to her thigh.

"I knew I had to do something," Mary said. "I said 'excuse me.'"

Mary said the man didn't respond, so she said it louder.

"No really, EXCUSE ME," she said.

The man tried to apologize.

"I said, You are NOT sorry. You are a d---perv," Mary said.

She had to climb over the man to get out of the auditorium and used that as an opportunity to step on his foot and kick his shin, she said.

Later that night, Mary told a friend about the incident. The friend, a BYU football player, knew BYU Crime Prevention Officer Dave Adams well and called to report the incident. Mary spoke with the Assassination jars Mexico's ruling party

Associated Press

MEXICO CITY — Hundreds of ruling party faithful chanted a mournful farewell Thursday to Luis Donaldo Colosio, the man who almost surely would have been Mexico's next president but for an assassin's bullets.

While Mexicans dealt with the shock of the country's first major political assassination since 1928, party leaders began considering the loss of Colosio as their presidential candidate five months before the election.

The slaying of Colosio at a campaign rally Wednesday in Tijuana was a stunning blow for Mexico's leadership, already struggling with a peasant uprising in the south and growing discontentment over economic changes brought by the free trade agreement with the United States and Canada.

The killing was "an offense against all Mexicans and an affront to the institutions which we have built throughout our history," said President Carlos Salinas de Gortari. "It has injured the deepest convictions of the people of Mexico, who have always been partisans of the path of harmony, of law and of peace."

Officials of the long-governing Institutional Revolutionary Party met with Salinas, who is barred by law from seeking a second six-year term and by tradition picks the party's candidate. The leaders refused to say when they might name a new candidate, who will be the strong favorite to win the Aug. 21 election and be sworn in as president in December.

The Institutional Revolutionary Party has not lost a national election since it was founded in 1929.

"It is a true tragedy. We still have not begun to think about the future," Oscar Espinosa, Colosio's campaign finance director, said as officials filed past the slain candidate's coffin at the party's headquarters in downtown Mexico City.

First health care bill moves through House

WASHINGTON — Congress began to move on health care Wednesday as the first bill moved through a House subcommittee, but while the bill achieves President Clinton's bottom line of universal coverage, it's a far cry from what he proposed.

"Today it's clear that for all of the public pronouncements and cynical assessments, Congress is actually moving forward on health reform, quietly, deliberately and responsibly," House Majority Leader Richard Gephardt, D-Mo., proclaimed on the House floor Thursday.

Gephardt praised the efforts of Rep. Pete Stark, D-Calif., whose bill passed the Ways and Means subcommittee Wednesday.

"They supported a bill that contains all of the crucial elements of the president's health care plan," Gephardt said.

Stark's bill, which passed 6-5, would extend Medicare to the poor and uninsured. Like Clinton's plan it would require employers to pay 80 percent of their workers' health insurance and seek to curb rapidly rising health care costs.

It does not include Clinton's mandatory health alliances, the key mechanism for holding down premiums by giving people bargaining clout in buying health insurance.

New Jersey gas explosion levels apartments

EDISON, N.J. — First came the roar, then a reddish-orange glow like the sun was shining in the middle of the night. As the flames leaped 100 feet into the air, barefoot pajama-clad residents fled for their lives.

On Thursday, teams of rescue workers and dogs scoured the bombed-out neighborhood for possible victims of the natural gas explosion that leveled eight apartment buildings and sparked an inferno visible in three states.

The blast left at least 250 people homeless. Nearly 500 people sought shelter at a Red Cross evacuation center at the township's high school.

Just one fatality was reported. About 40 of the 250 people living in the destroyed buildings had not been accounted for by late afternoon.

Hospital officials reported at least 100 people injured. The cause of the blast was unknown.

NASA's budget cut disastrous for its future

WASHINGTON — Concluding that NASA's belt-tightening is likely to fail, the Congressional Budget Office offered somber alternatives for the struggling agency Thursday including grounding America's astronauts and ending the space shuttle program.

The congressional office faulted what it said was NASA's strategy of continuing its ambitious space efforts despite a shrinking budget and a history of habitual cost overruns.

"The attempt to fit a program that was projected to cost more than $20 billion a year in the late 1990s into an annual budget of $14 billion risks delay, mission failure and the loss of anticipated benefits," the CBO report said.

NASA has been forced into "reinventing" itself because the agency for the first time in 21 years is faced with a budget that is actually less than it received the previous year, the congressional office said.

'Miffed' Leavitt rehires abortion attorney

SALT LAKE CITY — Gov. Mike Leavitt said he is confident a settlement can be reached in the state's ongoing legal battle over abortion laws.

Last week, Attorney General Jan Graham fired Mary Anne Wood, the private attorney defending the state against a lawsuit involving Utah's 1991 anti-abortion law.

A miffed Leavitt promptly rehired Wood.

At his monthly televised news conference Thursday, the Republican Leavitt said he is sure that he and Graham, a Democrat, can work out their differences and get the matter resolved.

"I'm not stuck on any laws, all I want is an agreement with the plaintiffs," he said. "Mary Anne Wood is advising me while we negotiate a settlement."

The bottom line, he said, is that he's the one who makes policy decisions for the state.

Besides, he said the case is nearing a compromise — although the same matter has been up in the air since early 1993.

The issue involves an appeal of the 1991 law's prohibition on fetal experimentation. The primary anti-abortion law was found unconstitutional.

Bid to establish college for LDS youth fails in Illinois

MARNEE MORTENSON
Universe Staff Writer

A Nauvoo man's hope of obtaining land for a second BYU sunk this month when he was unable to gather money needed to buy Carthage College, the school he planned to turn into a LDS-type college.

However, if the current owners sell and public interest is shown, he will again try to purchase the land.

Jerry McLeod tried, over a four-year period, to gather the $450,000 needed to fund a college in Carthage for LDS students. This school would enable his children, along with a student body of 500, to attend an LDS college close to home. When McLeod received only $21,000-$22,000, the land was sold to another buyer.

"We've got the students who are just begging for a college," McLeod said. "Everyone can see the need for it."

There are 6,000 people in the Illinois, Missouri and Iowa area graduating from high school this year, and there are 70,000 LDS students expected to graduate from high schools throughout the United States in 1994, McLeod said.

Church records through December 1992 estimated the number of 18-year-old LDS high school students in the United States and Canada in 1994 at 83,668. Since BYU has a capped enrollment of 27,000, and they only accepted 5,152 new students last fall, many students were left without an LDS-based school to attend.

"BYU is becoming an elitist college because they have so many kids trying to get in; they have to draw a line," McLeod said.

Glen Thomas, a BYU educational psychology faculty member assisting

Nauvoo man unable to raise funds needed to provide alternative to Y

McLeod, said, "There is a need for the school. There are only two (major) Church schools. There are a lot of people who cannot afford to come out here or don't want to."

"We wanted to create a smaller university to emulate the best of BYU," Thomas said. He stated that it would have no connection with BYU or the Church, but it would be a two to four-year college where they could control standards.

"I think we would have really gotten the thing off the ground if we could just get the land," Thomas said. "We were hoping to get accredited as soon as possible and get students transferring to BYU and other places."

Thomas said the area, rich in Church history, would provide an excellent site for study.

Bonnie Trap, a Nauvoo mother of 12, said, "It would be nice to have LDS kids out here. You're limited if you want to date LDS. A lot of our kids end up dating nonmembers because that's all there is."

McLeod also expressed concern over people leaving to attend school elsewhere, never returning to Nauvoo. One hundred young people in the Nauvoo Stake have gone to Utah and none of them have returned, he said. "I sent four out there myself, and only one came back."

"If they have a school closer to home, they can find work and receive a quality education without having to leave the area," McLeod said.

Trap said, "I would like to have a school out here so the people from the East can come here and the ones from the West can go there."

"Carthage College may come up for sale in awhile and then I'll try to purchase it again," McLeod said.

McLeod said he had a lot of support from BYU professors who thought setting up the school was a good idea. Some helped raise money, he said.

"I had retired BYU professors say they would come to Carthage and teach for a year for little or no pay." He said he received other teaching applications from across the country. Staffing the college does not present an obstacle, he said.

This college, with LDS ideology and an honor code similar to BYU's, would probably be in operation if it had ties to the Church. One multimillionaire told McLeod he would give him a million dollars to help fund the college if the LDS Church backed it. The Church told McLeod once he got the college operating, it would provide seminary teachers.

"We came close, we thought. We had some people who almost decided they'd support us, but the timing just was not right," Thomas said.

McLeod is also playing with the idea of building the same type of school in Nauvoo. "If it comes up, or I get enough interest, we have the property here in Nauvoo to build a college. The labor force could have us in there within two years."

However, this endeavor would cost $15-20 million since it involves building a school from the bottom up instead of converting an already existing college, which was their intent in Carthage.

"I'm convinced that if it would have been in Nauvoo, and not in Carthage, we wouldn't have had any problems. Carthage is just off the axle," Thomas said.

However, Thomas said many of the legs that start from scratch ultimately fail.

Compared to other universities, BYUSA has similar programs

By SCOTT BRIGHTON
Universe Staff Writer

Editor's Note: This is the fourth installment of a four-part series about BYUSA.

BYUSA is surprisingly similar to student organizations and governments at other universities.

Student Leadership Development Assistant Director Kerry Hammock has worked at several universities with student programs.

"Structurally, they're all different," he said. "Each university has individual needs, so they have unique systems to address all their particular needs."

Hammock said most universities don't have governments, but have student organizations similar to BYUSA.

"There just aren't student governments anymore, they are a thing of the past," Hammock said. "In 1980, when I was at the University of Georgia, the students voted to abolish the student government, so they did."

Hammock said they have an activities council that plans and coordinates activities for students.

"At the University of Miami they have a union board they call a government, but are similar to what we have here," Hammock said. "Florida State has a student government that provides advisory proposals to the university, but we have just as strong student input with the administration."

Hammock said most institutions say "we'll hear about it if students have a problem — we don't need an organized system."

"Mills College has a fully operating student government, but it is a private women's college with 200 students," Hammock said. "Compared with universities the size of BYU we are very similar."

Hammock said they hear a lot about apathy on campus, but they probably have greater involvement than most.

Assistant Dean of Student Life, Tom Kallunki, said, "Three years ago I counted the amount of service by students. We had 72,000 person hours for the year. Many other colleges struggle for 12,000 to 15,000 hours."

Fifteen percent voter turnout at the last BYUSA presidential election seems low, but compared with many universities struggling to get 3 to 5 percent, BYU looks good.

"Park College looks good because it gets a 90 percent voter turnout, until you see they have 150 students," Hammock said.

An April 1993 article in Campus Activities Programming showed the following results of a study indicating the greatest concerns of students at colleges with enrollment over 17,500:

The greatest concern is the rising cost of tuition. Second was general student apathy for the student government or organization.

The article said, "Students active in political issues have never been in the majority. They often have numbered less than 15 percent of the total student body at any period between 1900 and 1980."

New associate dean of Honors, G.E.

By SHARON KIRKHAM
Universe Staff Writer

President Rex E. Lee recently announced the addition of Professor James E. Faulconer as an associate dean of General Education and Honors.

Faulconer, who currently serves as chair of the Department of Philosophy, will begin the new assignment July 1.

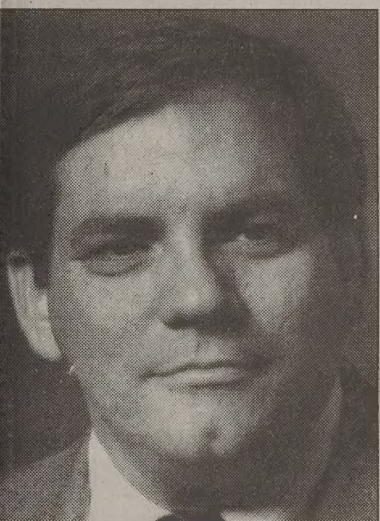

"In his new position, he will be providing leadership to the Honors Program and to the continuing development of general education courses at the University," said Paul A. Cox, dean of General Education and Honors.

Cox said Faulconer will not replace Associate Dean Stephen J. Ricks. Rather, Ricks will retain his title as associate dean during the time he is overseas with BYU's Travel Study program. He will look at general education and study abroad, Cox said.

Faulconer has been on BYU's faculty since 1975. He was Honors Professor of the Year in 1988, and also received an Alcuin Fellowship for his dedicated teaching and research that year. In 1991, the College of Humanities selected him to give the P.A. Christensen Lecture in Humanities, the college's highest faculty honor.

"Professor Faulconer has an extremely distinguished record in both teaching and scholarship," Cox said. "He is a world-class scholar and an internationally recognized authority on Nietzsche and post-modern theory."

CNN world correspondent to speak on foreign policy and Middle East

By ERIK TAVARES
Universe Staff Writer

Four distinguished experts on the media and the Middle East will address BYU students today, assessing the influence and effects of press coverage in foreign policy.

Ralph Begleiter, CNN's world affairs correspondent will begin the discussion with "Foreign Policy in the Satellite Age," at noon in the HFAC's de Jong Concert Hall.

Later, Begleiter will be part of a special panel of experts who will discuss "Reporting the Middle East," a seminar sponsored by the International Media Studies Program. The debate will be at 2 p.m. in the de Jong Concert Hall.

Both the speech and the panel are free, and open to all students and faculty.

John Hughes, a BYU professor and former editor of the Christian Science Monitor, will moderate the discussion. With Begleiter, other panelists will include Bishara Bahbah, a member of the Palestinian delegation to the multilateral peace talks, and Akiba Cohen, professor of communications at Hebrew University in Jerusalem.

"Students will be able to gain a better understanding of the complex forces at work in the Middle East," said Hughes, a former Pulitzer Prize winner for international reporting. "They can also gain a highest perception on how to learn more about this issue."

The panel will focus on press coverage and an assessment of how the media handles foreign policy. Hughes sought experts who could bring an Israeli, a Palestinian and an American perspective to the ideas presented.

"I want to elevate an interest in careers and ideas in international communications," he said. "These panelists can influence through sharing their expertise."

Both Begleiter and the panelists will deal with many international press issues — focusing on the Middle East — including how the United States could improve their foreign communication, the future of the Palestinian press and the dilemmas of protecting correspondents against terrorist violence.

The panel discussion will be videotaped for use by PBS stations, schools of journalism and centers for study of international affairs.

Begleiter, based in Washington D.C., is well known for his coverage of all aspects of U.S. foreign policy for CNN.

Bishara Bahbah is Associate Director of the Institute for Social and Economic Policy in the Middle East at Harvard University. A graduate of BYU, he was editor-in-chief of Al-Fair newspapers in Jerusalem for two years.

Akiba Cohen is also a visiting professor at the school of International Service at American University in Washington D.C., and has published a number of books on the subject of television news.

An animation artist who over the past 30 years has contributed to almost every major animation studio in Los Angeles will open his "bag of tricks" today and show students things no one outside of Disney studios has seen.

Ron Dias, who began his career with Disney animating "Sleeping Beauty" in 1956, returns to BYU Friday from noon to 2 p.m. in the Joseph Smith Auditorium, to explain Disney's latest projects and the process artists undergo to create them.

Dias began his association with BYU three years ago when two BYU design students requested his help on a final project. Barrett said Dias really became excited when he witnessed the students' work and promised to do anything to help.

"Ron's been instrumental in developing a bridge between BYU and Disney," Barrett said. "That's why we want to keep contact with him going." Dias was the principle artist of the beast in "Beauty and the Beast," and was a key background artist for "Who Framed Roger Rabbit?" and "The Little Mermaid."

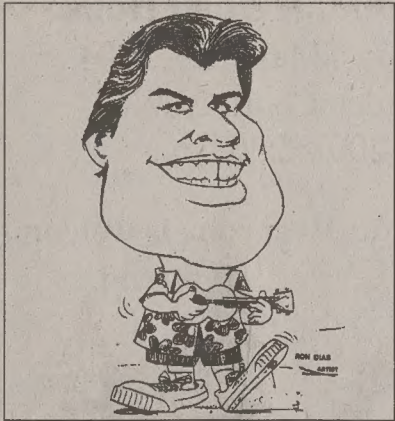

He designed the new Disneyland attraction "Toon Town," and three of his recent paintings of Disney characters were sold for a record price at Christie's auction in New York City.

Computers may also comprise a portion of Dias' remarks, Barrett said. While "Snow White" took animators more than 8 1/2 years to create, today's Disney features are usually produced in under one year with the help of computers, he said.

On his last visit, Dias left his home address with a dozen students he was not able to address directly, Barrett said.

"When he was getting into the business, he had no one to give him pointers," Barrett said.

"He really wants to pass on what he knows to the upcoming generation of artists."

New age pianist performs concert to raise money for BYU team

By BETHANY HANKS
Universe Lifestyle Writer

Local new age pianist Jon Schmidt will perform a benefit concert tonight at 7:30 in the Provo High School Auditorium to raise money for BYU's highly ranked Model United Nations team competing in New York City next week.

Concert tickets are $7 or $5 with student I.D. and can be purchased from the David M. Kennedy Center, from M.U.N. students or at the door. All proceeds go toward Dr. David Buckner's International and Area Studies class of 58 students, which will represent the United States in the annual mock U.N. conference.

Michelle Schmidt said her husband's music is a classical-new age mixture of Mozart, Billy Joel and Manheim Steamroller.

"His concerts include comical as well as musical entertainment," she said.

Schmidt has released two CD's, "August End" and "Walk in the Woods," and is working on a third.

Buckner said he appreciates Schmidt's willingness to help M.U.N. participants raise $65,000 to participate in the prestigious collegiate conference involving over 2,000 students from around the United States.

Each student is responsible to raise about $1,000 for the week-long trip conference, Buckner said.

Foreign students with visas restricting them from employment have difficulty raising the money; therefore, donations are greatly needed and appreciated. All donations are received through the David M. Kennedy Center.

Buckner said the colleges of Continuing Education, Nursing, Home and Family Science, Biology and Agriculture, Fines Arts and Communications and Education have donated about $10,000 already.

"Representing the U.S. at this year's conference is a premiere opportunity because of our nation's extensive power and involvement in the U.N. and the world," Buckner said.

According to Buckner, schools previously representing the U.S. include Harvard, Yale, Georgetown, Chicago and Columbia.

"BYU is the first western school to represent the U.S. in at least eight years," he said.

The USAMUN organization assigns different U.N. countries to each participating university according to the school's performance and ranking the prior year, Buckner said.

At last year's competition, BYU represented Israel and placed in the top 10 out of 140 schools competing, said Cory Leonard, teaching assistant for the class.

According to Buckner, Israel's ambassador to the United Nations named BYU the best collegiate delegation to represent Israel at any national conference in 1993.

The M.U.N. team presents U.N. issues, creates assembly resolutions and votes just like a student congress, Buckner said. They are judged on their ability to create coalitions, to write resolutions, to represent the assigned country and to give speeches.

Slapstick silliness part of 'Scapino!'

By TIFFANY CRAMER ELIASON
Universe Lifestyle Writer

Pioneer Theatre Company is now presenting the high-paced farce "Scapino!" being performed Monday through Saturday evenings until April 2.

"Scapino!" revolves around the adventures of a servant who plots with two young lovers to escape the marriages their wealthy fathers arranged and to avoid their fathers' anger.

Pioneer Theatre Company Artistic Director Charles Morey said the script "allows for and encourages comic improvisation, topical humor and local references. The plot is largely a framework for bits, gags and slapstick — for nonstop hilarity."

"The plot is really insignificant," said Naomi Leach, assistant director of marketing and communications. "It's an excuse for a lot of slapstick and silliness."

"It's the story of two sons of wealthy landowners who fall madly in love with girls who aren't the ones their fathers chose for them. They ask their friend and servant Scapino to help them out of this mess," Leach said.

Scapino saves the day with con games, disguises and slapstick.

"Anyone in for an evening of fun and laughter will enjoy the play. It's really fast-paced with lots of action — the young at heart will love it," Leach said.

"Max Robinson who plays the character, Scapino, has quite a reputation locally," she said. "He's really popular — this is his show. It's a showcase for the actors because the plot isn't that significant."

Robinson returned from working in New York to play this lead role. His most recent performances include Captain Hook in "Peter Pan" for Seattle's Intiman Theatre, the off-Broadway production of "Light up the Sky," and film appearances in "Other People's Money" and Woody Allen's "Shadow and Fog," according to a Pioneer Theatre Company press release.

"Scapino!" is based on the Moliere classic "Les Fourberies de Scapin," which was updated by Frank Dunlop and Jim Dale in the early 1970s. At that time the storyline was brought into the 20th century.

The play's setting is Italy, at a seaport reminiscent of Naples. The costuming is anywhere between the 1930s and 50s, Leach said.

"Scapino!" has been performed on both London's West End and New York's Broadway.

Curtain times are 7:30 p.m. Monday through Thursday, 8 p.m. Friday and Saturday, and 2 p.m. for Saturday matinees.

Talented singer performs with symphony

By LAURZIA LEE
Universe Lifestyle Writer

Multi-talented singer Maureen McGovern is coming to Salt Lake City today and Saturday for outstanding performances with the Utah Symphony.

The concerts, which are part of the Utah Symphony's Entertainment Series, will be conducted by Robert Henderson, associate director of conducting at the Utah Symphony.

The concert will be sponsored by Salt Lake County to help the hungry. The county is asking those who attend to bring a non-perishable food item to be donated to the Utah Food Bank.

McGovern has had a long and successful music career, which includes numerous recordings and concerts. She has also been involved with Broadway plays, movies, television and radio.

"McGovern is a multi-talented performer," said Ashlie Esco, Utah Symphony public relations intern. "She has done everything a vocal artist could do in the industry."

McGovern has recorded two

Academy Award-winning songs, including "The Morning After" from the movie "The Poseidon Adventure" and "We may Never Love Like This

MAUREEN MCGOVERN

Again" from the movie "The Towering Inferno."

Younger audiences might recognize her by her hit song "Can You Read My Mind" from the movie "Superman" or from her role as the guitar-playing nun in the movie "Airplane."

She has also appeared in Broadway productions of "The Pirates of Penzance" and "Nine," as well as many other theater productions.

Esco said McGovern has appeared with the Utah Symphony before and was very popular with the audiences.

McGovern's music career and vigorous touring and recording schedule is only a part of her life. She is also actively involved in numerous charity organizations.

McGovern is currently the vice president of the Muscular Dystrophy Association, and also acts as the national chairperson of the Polymyositis/Dermatomyositis division of that organization.

She is also involved in Save the Children and the Planned Parenthood Federation of America's Board of Advocates.

"There are numerous other charitable or non-profit organizations she has been involved with — too many for me to list," Esco said.

Both performances will begin at 8 p.m. in Abravanel Hall. Ticket prices range from $15 to $32 and can be purchased at the box office or reserved by phone at 533-6683. Student discount tickets are available for $5.

Brad Sutterfield named WAC diver of the week

By MIKE SYLVESTER
Universe Sports Writer

Posting scores of 73, 72 and 70 in the Oregon Duck Invitational on March 7-8, BYU senior Brad Sutterfield was named Western Athletic Conference Men's Golf Athlete of the Week for March 13-19.

Sutterfield led the Cougars to a second-place finish at the Oregon tournament behind eighth-ranked Arizona State.

Sutterfield said he was happy with his performance in Oregon and that he was pleased to receive the award.

The golf teams participate in the tournament, and BYU Golf Coach Bruce Brockbank said each team has 10 to 15 players.

"I got that award for the week is very impressive," Brockbank said.

Brockbank said Sutterfield's leadership has strengthened the team the past few weeks, and that it would continue to help to BYU's success. He said he expects Sutterfield and the team to continue to improve.

The next five or six tournaments will be Sutterfield's best," Brockbank said. Sutterfield was named the WAC Athlete of the Week in April of 1988.

Sutterfield is a graduate of Brighton High School in Sandy, Utah, where he was a four-year letterman. He was the National Golf Association Player of the Year in 1991, and was the winner of the 1992 Utah State Amateur Championship.

This year, Sutterfield has placed in the top seven in four of BYU's eight tournaments.

Road struggles continue, netters drop two more

By MIKE SYLVESTER
Universe Sports Writer

Though the BYU tennis team is undefeated at home, their road troubles continued as they lost 4-3 to San Jose State, and 6-1 to 24th-ranked Cal-Berkeley earlier this week.

BYU split the six single matches against SJSU on Monday, but lost the doubles point by losing all three of its doubles matches.

BYU freshman Boris Bosnjakovic picked up his first singles victory since returning to play on March 11th after sitting out for five weeks because of a back injury.

Bosnjakovic defeated SJSU's No. 3 player, Alan Alvistur, 6-4, 7-5, improving his season record to 19-9.

After losing his first set 2-6, senior Colin McMullin came up with strong second and third sets of 6-3 and 6-0 to win his singles match over SJSU's Nicholas Ionesco.

McMullin, who transferred from Montana to BYU last year after placing third in singles play at the Big Sky championships, is now 9-9 on the year.

Craig Manning scored BYU's third point against SJSU by beating Yuval Bauman in two sets, 7-5, 6-3. Manning is 11-9 in singles play.

The loss to San Jose dropped the Cougars record to 6-7 in dual meets while improving San Jose's record to 11-4.

Senior Herman Vandecasteele earned BYU's only point against Cal on Tuesday by defeating Steve Lappin 6-4, 7-6. BYU's No. 1 seed, Vandecasteele, is now 20-8 in singles play this year.

BYU's next home match is on April 4th against Utah State.

Thelin won national diving title despite being 2 months pregnant

By ALLEN BRIGHTON
Universe Sports Writer

When BYU's Vanessa Bergman Thelin completed her last dive at the NCAA swimming and diving championships last week it culminated a collegiate career that is unmatched in BYU female diving history.

Thelin is a six-time All-American and this year won the 1-meter NCAA diving title. She also placed 10th in 3-meter diving at the NCAA championships for an Honorable Mention All-American.

Perhaps what makes her recent accomplishments even more significant is the fact she was two months pregnant when she competed at the NCAA championships.

This child will be the first for Vanessa and her husband Jason.

Thelin began diving at the age of 8 when her mother got her started. Her father was a member of the diving team at Cal-Tech.

For Vanessa the decision to come to BYU was one that fulfilled a life-long desire.

"I've always wanted to come to BYU," Thelin said.

As most college athletes would attest perhaps one of the greatest difficulties is learning to balance competitive sports with the time it takes to be academically successful. For Thelin her freshman year was the toughest as she said it was hard to adjust to college life and have athletics on top of that.

Thelin said BYU's tutoring program that helps out athletes with their academics has been a big help. She will graduate this spring.

For Thelin the highlight of her college career was learning to love the sport of diving again.

"I went through a stage where I didn't enjoy diving," Thelin said. "At BYU I learned to love the sport again."

A key influence on her success has been BYU diving coach Keith Russell.

"He's the best coach you could ever have," Thelin said.

After the birth of their child, Vanessa plans to keep on training for the 1996 Summer Olympics in Atlanta, Ga.

Thelin said she would encourage children that plan on taking up any sport to make sure they enjoy it.

"With work you can do anything," Thelin said.

She emphasized that in order to put the amount of work it takes to be successful in any sport, you have to really enjoy what you are doing.

Thelin said a key role model for her was former BYU diver Tristen Baker.

Her accomplishments this year have been impressive with her national title at the top of the list.

Thelin was named WAC diver of the year for winning both springboard events at the WAC championships, beating her own previous WAC records.

Thelin won four events at the prestigious All-American Diving Invitational in Austin, Texas earlier this year.

At the BYU Diving Invitational this year she set school records on both boards. Vanessa is the first BYU female diver to pass the 500-point plateau on a springboard.

At the Zone E qualifying meet this year she placed first in the 1-meter and second in the 3-meter.

Last year at the NCAA Championships she placed second on the 1-meter.

She is a member of the USA diving team.

BYU 5k set for April 7th

By MIKE SYLVESTER
Universe Sports Writer

The BYU Intramural program is sponsoring a 5K run for students and faculty to be held at 4:00 p.m. on April 7th.

Kara Kooi, organizer of the race, said the purpose of the race is for participants to relieve some stress before finals.

"It's a great release," Kooi said. "It's a time just to have fun and receive a free T-shirt."

The run will be divided into seven classes: Wheelchairs, male and female BYU track athletes, male and female students.

The run will begin at the Richards Building quad and wind its way around campus and the surrounding streets.

Participants must register at 3:30 on the day of the run in the RB quad. The number of participants is unlimited.

T-shirts will be awarded to the top finishers of each division, and 50 T-shirts will be given away in a random drawing.

More information is available by calling 378-7597.

UNIVERSITY FORUM ASSEMBLY
Tuesday, March 29, 11 a.m., Marriott Center

DR. NORMAN MYERS
Visiting Fellow, Green College, Oxford University
Senior Fellow of the World Wildlife Forum, USA

"The Crisis of Biodiversity: Problem or Opportunity for a Generation of Planetary Stewards"

"We are at a watershed in the course of the human enterprise. For the first time, entire sectors of our earth home face the serious threat of degradation and destruction. This applies notably to the mass extinction of species under way, a phenomenon with capacity to leave an impoverishing impact upon the biosphere for at least five million years." Dr. Myers will raise all manner of troubling questions about the role of the present generation as planetary stewards at this critical time. "Can we recognize the moral imperatives implicit? Can we mobilize the ethical capacity to measure up to the unprecedented challenge? Fortunately, we still have time, though only just time, to turn problems into opportunities."

Recipient of the 1992 Volvo Environment Prize, Norman Myers, PhD (University of California, Berkeley), is currently a consultant in environment and development and a Visiting Fellow of Green College, Oxford University. He was the first, through his 1979 book The Sinking Ark, to identify and delineate the mass extinction of species under way. More recently, he has served with the Biodiversity Task Force under the World Bank, and he is an expert advisor on global environmental facility funding for biodiversity. Dr. Myers has participated in research, consulting, and projects in 90-plus countries. His lecture will be illustrated with slides from all parts of the world, taken during the course of his 20 years of residence in the tropics and 12 years of residence in Europe and the United States.

[There will be a question-and-answer session following the forum from 12 noon until 1 p.m. in the ELWC Varsity Theater.]

Utah's federal legislators push for Whitewater probe

By BRADY LONG
Universe Staff Writer

From the onset of the Whitewater controversy to Tuesday's vote scheduling hearings in the House, Utah's members of Congress have played a leading role in the developing inquiry into President Clinton's connection to the failed Whitewater real estate company.

All the Utah delegation voiced initial support of and voted for Whitewater hearings. Democratic Rep. Karen Shepherd and Republican Sen. Bob Bennett have further driven the investigation.

"The Clinton administration has bungled the Whitewater issue from the beginning and they need to be held to a higher standard," Shepherd said after the House's vote. "Congressional hearings will do a great deal of good if they shed light on the details of this blurry issue instead of providing a soapbox for partisan mudslinging."

Shepherd was the first House Democrat to request that a special prosecutor investigate Clinton's connection to Whitewater real estate development and the Madison

As a member of the Senate Banking Committee, Bennett joined with Sen. Alfonse D'Amato, R-N.Y., and 42 other senators in a written promise to block nomination hearings of Clinton's nominee for a federal post until hearings were held on Whitewater. The letter, which was also signed by Republican Sen. Orrin Hatch, was sent to Senate Majority Leader George Mitchell, D-Maine.

"If nothing else, the hearing will air out questions raised including whether or not the Clinton administration properly handled allegations raised regarding federal law enforcement and regulators," Hatch said.

Mexican presidential candidate killed; politics suffer from violence, unrest

By AMY CRAGUN
Universe Staff Writer

Wednesday's assassination of Luis Donaldo Colosio, Mexico's leading presidential candidate, was the first act of political violence at the national level in over 50 years and has shocked citizens and disrupted upcoming elections.

Edward Epstein, professor of political science at the University of Utah and a specialist in Latin American studies, said there has traditionally been violence in the lower levels of Mexican politics, but this has rarely been at high levels of government. He said the violence has been predominantly aimed at the official government party.

"There's always been a lot of violence, but it seems to be increasing," Epstein said.

LaMond Tullis, professor of political science at BYU and a specialist in Latin American politics said there is a lot of political violence on state and local levels, but it has not been characteristic of national politics.

The next presidential elections will be held in August with the 6-year presidential term beginning Dec. 1, 1994.

"The Mexican political system is not prepared to deal with this in any predictable way," Tullis said. He said it is a serious blow to the system of choosing and preparing candidates for presidency.

"They may need to postpone the elections in order to get their act together," Tullis said.

Epstein said the PRI will probably choose a new candidate in the next two or three weeks. He said the likely choice is Manuel Camacho, who has been heavily involved in negotiations with the Zapatista National Liberation Army in the southern state of Chiapas.

Tullis said the effect on the international image of the PRI will depend on how they react to the situation. If they become manipulative in getting another candidate and still winning the election, their image will be damaged.

the introduction of Microsoft's Windows, WordPerfect is a software leader, controlling 90 percent of the DOS market and nearly 37 percent of the overall market.

According to the Utah Information Technologies Association, "Utah ranks well within the top ten U.S. regions of information technology, and is second in the software sector."

David Lampey, an analyst of computer and information corporations who works at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, said a healthy environment was helpful to the computer industry both in Utah and Massachusetts.

Lampey's experience comes from analyzing the growth and transitions of Massachusetts' Route 128 industrial center — research that has resulted in the publication of two books.

"Massachusetts has quite a history of technological innovation," he notes. "MIT was founded here in the late 1800s because Boston was the industrial hub of the nation at that time. The Boston area has been able to build on that base."

Spiraling from these computer technology developments are a solid infrastructure of lawyers, machine shops, and specialty labs that fully comprise an infrastructure conducive to the development of future computer industry corporations, Lampey said.

"If the Provo/Orem area can build that type of infrastructure and keep an attractive environment with low taxes for corporations, they will consistently draw new computer companies to that area," he said.

The local economy has been very helpful in Utah. The low cost of living and solid economy don't go overlooked by companies, Weymouth said. Utah's economy has been among the top in the nation for about 15 years.

"Quality of life here is helpful to growth," said Kelli Christensen, Novell spokeswoman. "It is less expensive to live here than in the other two areas."

MIT's Lampey cautions against becoming too comfortable because of a good economy. Economies in individual sectors change quickly, he said.

For instance, Massachusetts' success hasn't been without its spurts. The software industry in the Route 128 area is currently in a depression. Lampey points to this trend as a reason states shouldn't specifically target a certain segment of any industry.

Continual changes in this competitive industry could leave Utah reeling, Lampey notes. According to statistics from UITA, produced $5.3 billion of revenue in 1992, the last year statistics were available — the largest chunk any industry. If that industry were falter, then a good chunk of Utah's economy would fall with it.

Further, 22 percent of this industry located in Utah County, and this divides 39 percent of the gross revenue. Only 12 percent of employment in Massachusetts is in the high-tech computer industry," Lampey said. As a result, he said Massachusetts has been able to deal with a decline in the software market.

BYU's University Computing Services Executive Director Kenneth McDonald said that type of dip is unlikely to take place in Utah, though.

"Competition in software is getting keen," McDonald said. "But there's a question in my mind that Utah County is heading toward a high-tech stance that they haven't had in the past."

police March 1.

Adams said when the accused man was interviewed, he told Adams he would sit next to a woman he found attractive, alone and half-asleep.

"Somebody who would not resist," Adams said.

The man would put his knee next to hers, if she did not move it, he took that as the signal to begin moving his hand.

The man admitted to victimizing up to 60 women, Adams said.

After Mary reported the incident, BYU Police staked out the American Heritage class hoping to find the perpetrator.

The stake-out attempt on March 2 was unsuccessful. March 7, however, he came back to the class.

Mary saw him first.

She said she noticed a man that looked like the one who sat next to her Feb. 28, sitting two rows behind her. He wasn't taking notes.

She said she looked at him several times because she wanted to be positive she identified the right person.

When Mary made eye contact, she said she was sure it was him.

"I was really scared," Mary said about coming face-to-face with the man. "I honestly didn't think I would ever see this guy again. It was kind of like the shock of all shocks."

Mary said she looked to see where his hand was and noticed it was resting under the lap tray of one woman's desk.

Adams said Mary came outside, where he and Officer Carolyn Downey were waiting, visibly distraught. Mary told them that the man was sitting behind her, between two women.

Downey said she entered the room in plain clothes and asked Jane to identify the man. Jane pointed out the same man.

When the man came out, BYU police officers stopped him. Downey said the man was quiet, indicating to her that he knew the reason they wanted to speak to him.

The man is a 26-year-old student who is described by Jane as approximately 5'8" or 5'9", 145-155 pounds, medium brown hair and an acne-scarred face.

Downey said she returned to the auditorium to find the woman the suspect was sitting next to.

"She was already gone," Downey said.

The man was referred to the Honor Code Office March 9 and asked to officially withdraw March 10, Adams said.

Jane and Mary are not sure if they will pursue criminal charges.

"The system revictimizes the victims sometimes," Downey said.

Jane said she thinks the LDS Church can give the man the help he needs.

Both Jane and Mary said they are not looking for money or revenge.

"This guy needs help," Jane said. "That's all I want."

They said protecting other women from being victimized by this man and men like him is their main goal.

Adams said the case against the man will be much stronger if more victims are willing to come forward. Jane and Mary's combined statements regarding their encounter with the man aided fast disciplinary action, Adams said.

Mary said other women who have had similar experiences should come forward.

"They need to come in," Mary said.

"Now that he's been caught, they should feel even safer."

Jane said she was afraid to report her ordeal to Campus Police.

"I didn't think anyone would believe me," Jane said.

By publishing the story Mary hopes to help other victimized women to come forward and make reports to the police.
